Melissa Grey & David Morneau, masters of algorithmic and generative processes, have some fun on their collaboration with clarinetist and dancer Diego Vásquez. The duo play handheld devices that most people would commonly regard as toys (a Merlin Music Machine and a Nintendo Game Boy), and they compose disco-chiptune rhythms which Vásquez navigates with his clarinet. “Fluorescence” is a 7-minute epic which bounces, bobs, and twirls, inhabiting a cyber-klezmer rave of its own. The tempo halves to near-dubstep pace at a couple points, and near the end it slowly accelerates back up in a rollercoaster rush. “Inforescence” sticks to a steadier disco beat, but the echo-enhanced clarinet notes dance around it in ecstatic bubbles.

A dark-themed banner for Jetpack. On the left is the Jetpack logo (a green lightning bolt in a circle) followed by the text "Jetpack" in white. To the right of this is the text "The ultimate plugin from the WordPress experts" in white. Further right is a small video player showing a woman in a colorful patterned vest. To the right of the video player is a green button with the text "Get started" in white. Above the main text, there are several small, faint icons: a magnifying glass, a person, a shield, a checkmark, a double arrow, a circle, a list, and a group of people.
